What makes a user convertible?

NoS Taxi ...

A product by NOTO Solutions.

Neither an attractive design, nor the functionality, the combination of both makes a user convertible. For an example, “person A” runs a taxi app having a great UI that always lead a user to visit app store, whereas “person B” have a different taxi application with a great functionality that lead a user to book a ride, but its visitor counts are lesser than A. Then who will gain a great ROI? Is that Person A or Person B? Unfortunately, both apps loose a lot of conversions due to their different lack points.

One has an attractive layout that increase reach and second have smooth functionality that lead conversions, but one loose a user due to its complexity whereas second loose due to a worst UI. So, along with a great UI, user specific and device centered features also required to convert a user, just like –
